1. Executive Summary

Déborah Vichith is a motivated intermediate-level learner whose English profile is shaped by a meaningful gap between her receptive and productive skills. Her listening comprehension and reading comprehension sit at a solid B1 (2) to B1+ (2.5) level, confirming that she understands English well in context and can engage meaningfully with the language when it is delivered to her. Her grammar knowledge, as measured by the written MCQ, reaches B1+ (2.5) — a creditable result that reflects a genuine structural foundation.

However, her spoken output currently sits at A2 (1), representing the most significant gap in her overall profile. Déborah speaks with hesitation, limits herself to short utterances, and tends to disengage from conversation — often saying "that's it" when vocabulary fails her — rather than attempting to circumvent or repair communication. This confidence gap is a defining feature of her learner profile and must be treated as a pedagogical priority alongside grammar accuracy.

Her writing is at B1 (2): communicatively effective but marked by tense errors and register limitations that will need to be addressed if she is to produce the professional emails her role at HEC demands.

Taken together across all five assessed skills, Déborah's overall CEFR level is B1 (2), with clear upward potential — particularly given her strong listening base, generally good pronunciation, and self-motivated engagement with English through film and television.

| Overall Skills Profile at a Glance

2. Skill-by-Skill Assessment

| 2.1 Reading and Vocabulary — B1+ (2.5)

Strengths

- Déborah's vocabulary range, as evidenced across both her written responses and her spoken interaction, is appropriate for B1+ level. She activates relevant, topic-appropriate lexis without apparent difficulty: reception, moving, holiday, free time, take care of — all reflect a practical, functional command of everyday and semi-professional vocabulary.

- Her comprehension during the oral session was notably strong: she understood questions clearly, responded on topic, and did not require significant repetition or reformulation from the evaluator. This confirms solid passive vocabulary at B1 level, with elements reaching beyond.
- She is able to infer meaning and engage across a range of familiar topics (work, personal background, plans, daily life), suggesting that her reading comprehension would perform well in similar familiar-context texts.

Areas for Development

- Professional and domain-specific collocations are underdeveloped. For her role, Déborah will need to acquire and activate vocabulary such as: handle a query, transfer a call, redirect a visitor, schedule an appointment, liaise with a department, follow up on a request. These are not yet part of her active repertoire.
- Phrasal verb accuracy requires attention. The confusion between move out and move around (written test) is representative of a broader gap in idiomatic precision that affects both comprehension and production.
- Extending her vocabulary into B2-level register — including hedging language, polite refusal, and structured explanation — will be essential for achieving her stated professional goals.

| 2.2 Writing — B1 (2)

Strengths

- Déborah writes with communicative clarity: all three free writing responses in the written test conveyed meaning successfully, despite grammatical imperfections.
- She demonstrates emerging clause complexity, using subordinate time clauses naturally: "when I have free time" — a marker of B1-level structural development.
- Her writing style is concise and uncluttered, which is a genuine asset in professional email writing. She does not overload sentences with unnecessary complexity.
- Vocabulary choices are generally appropriate and do not suggest lexical poverty.

Areas for Development

- Tense control is the most pressing writing gap. Three distinct errors were identified across just three short responses: incorrect use of present simple for past (grow → grew), past simple used in place of a conditional (liked → would like), and preposition confusion (to → at). This error density in free production is the primary factor limiting her writing to B1 (2) rather than B1+ (2.5).
- Future and conditional structures are inconsistently controlled. The ability to express plans, intentions, and polite requests (I would like to..., I am planning to..., If you could...) is fundamental to professional email writing and must be a core instructional focus.
- Professional register needs to be built explicitly. Déborah currently writes in a neutral, conversational register. For her role, she will need templates and models for common professional email types: welcoming visitors, directing queries, explaining procedures, and following up on issues.

- Basic writing conventions — including the capitalisation of / and the punctuation of compound sentences — should be addressed early in training, as these have direct implications for the professional image projected in written communications.

| 2.3 Grammar — B1+ (2.5)

Strengths

- A score of 77% (23/30) on the grammar MCQ places Déborah solidly in the B1+ (2.5) band, confirming reliable control of a wide range of core intermediate structures in a controlled, recognition-based task.
- She handles present simple and continuous, basic article use, coordinating conjunctions, and common prepositions with general confidence.
- This foundational competence means that training can move relatively quickly from correction and consolidation into applied production — she is not starting from zero.

Areas for Development

- Irregular past simple verb forms remain an active gap (grow/grew, know/knew, write/wrote). These high-frequency verbs will appear in professional communication daily and must be consolidated.
- Future intention structures (will / going to / would like to / present progressive for plans) are not yet reliably distinguished. This confusion between tense forms is observable in both written and oral production and is the single highest-priority structural gap.
- Prepositions of place versus direction (at / in / to) present a persistent French-interference pattern. The confusion of à with to rather than at in fixed location expressions must be addressed explicitly.
- Plural agreement, as observed in the oral session, is inconsistent: "a lot of phone call," "many professor," "a lot of persons" — these errors are frequent in spoken production and risk creating a negative impression in professional interactions.
- Present perfect was absent from spoken production even when contextually appropriate (e.g., when describing relevant experiences or recent events). Déborah appears to default to was and past simple where present perfect would be expected, suggesting this tense has not yet been internalised.

| 2.4 Listening — B1 (2)

Strengths

- Listening is one of Déborah's most reliable skills and represents a meaningful asset relative to her speaking level. During the oral session, she consistently understood questions at natural conversational pace without requiring repetition.

- She responded on topic and with appropriate content, demonstrating that she can process spoken English in a real-time interactive context — a critical skill for her role at the HEC reception desk.
- Her self-reported habit of watching films and television series in English has clearly contributed to this competency, and it should be actively encouraged as a supplementary learning strategy throughout training.
- She self-corrected during the oral session on at least two occasions, which indicates active monitoring of her own output and an emerging awareness of accuracy — a positive indicator for learning progression.

Areas for Development

- While her listening comprehension is solid in one-to-one conversation, she may find faster-paced, multi-speaker, or telephone-mediated English more challenging. Given that telephone communication is her highest stated priority, targeted listening practice with phone call recordings, voicemails, and simulated reception scenarios will be important.
- Building confidence in listening under pressure — where she must also respond quickly and accurately — will be a training priority, particularly for the reception and telephone interaction objectives.

| 2.5 Speaking — A2 (1)

Strengths

- Déborah's pronunciation is generally good and was assessed as the strongest element of her oral performance. She is intelligible, produces sounds accurately for the most part, and demonstrated the ability to self-correct on pronunciation during the session — a sign of phonological awareness.
- She understands spoken English well and is able to initiate a response, showing she is not entirely blocked at the output level.
- Despite her hesitations, she communicates basic meaning successfully in short utterances, confirming an A2 functional baseline.

Areas for Development

- Fluency is the most significant speaking challenge. Déborah's spoken output is characterised by frequent pauses, short or incomplete turns, and a strong tendency to disengage when vocabulary is unavailable — typically by saying "that's it" and halting rather than attempting paraphrase or circumlocution. This strategy, while understandable, limits conversational flow and will impede professional interactions where she is expected to maintain engagement.
- Grammatical accuracy in spontaneous speech is significantly weaker than in controlled written tasks. Plural forms are inconsistently applied, past tense errors (including over-reliance on was) are frequent, and present perfect is entirely absent from her spoken production.

- Interaction management — the ability to extend turns, ask clarifying questions, manage pauses professionally, and redirect conversation — is underdeveloped and must be built through structured role-play and communicative practice.
- Confidence is the underlying theme. The gap between her receptive competence (B1) and her spoken output (A2) is not primarily a knowledge gap — it reflects anxiety and limited spoken practice. Training must prioritise low-stakes, high-repetition speaking activities in a supportive environment that builds confidence progressively alongside accuracy.

3. Learning Objectives

The following three objectives are designed to address Déborah's highest-priority professional needs as confirmed during the oral assessment and validated goal-setting session. They are sequenced according to Bloom's Revised Taxonomy, moving from consolidation of foundational knowledge through to autonomous professional performance. Each objective is directly anchored to her real workplace context at HEC.

| □ Objective 1 — Recall and Distinguish (Remember / Understand) Grammatical Foundations for Professional Communication

> By the end of the training programme, Déborah will be able to recall and correctly apply high-frequency irregular past simple forms, present perfect structures, and future intention forms (will / going to / would like to / present progressive) in written and spoken professional contexts, achieving at least 80% accuracy in targeted grammar exercises and demonstrating consistent self-correction during guided speaking practice.

- Addresses: Irregular verb errors; absence of present perfect; future/conditional confusion; plural agreement
- Bloom's level: Remember / Understand
- Workplace relevance: Accurate tense use is foundational to all of Déborah's professional communication goals — from email writing to explaining procedures to students and visitors

| □ Objective 2 — Compose and Produce (Apply)

> By the end of the training programme, Déborah will be able to compose clear, structured professional emails in English — covering common reception scenarios such as welcoming a visitor, redirecting an enquiry, explaining a rule or procedure, and following up on a request — using appropriate register, accurate prepositions, correct verb tenses, and standard professional conventions (greeting, subject line, sign-off), as demonstrated through a portfolio of at least five independently written and assessed email tasks.

- Addresses: Professional register; tense and preposition accuracy; writing conventions; domain-specific vocabulary; stated goal of writing clear, structured professional emails
- Bloom's level: Apply
- Workplace relevance: Email writing is one of Déborah's two highest-priority professional goals and a core daily task in her role at HEC's main reception

□ Objective 3 — Manage and Adapt (Analyse / Create)

Spoken Professional Interaction: Telephone Calls and In-Person Reception Scenarios

> By the end of the training programme, Déborah will be able to manage and sustain a professional telephone call or in-person reception interaction in English — including greeting the caller or visitor, identifying their need, explaining a problem or rule clearly, proposing a solution, and closing the interaction professionally — using domain-specific vocabulary, appropriate conditional and polite request forms (e.g., "If you'd like to...", "I'll transfer you to...", "Could you please..."), and communicative repair strategies to maintain conversation when vocabulary is limited, as assessed through a simulated role-play.

- Addresses: Telephone English; fluency and confidence; interaction management; communicative repair strategies (replacing "that's it" with productive paraphrase); conditional language; problem/solution vocabulary
- Bloom's level: Analyse / Create
- Workplace relevance: Telephone communication and in-person problem-solving are Déborah's two self-identified highest priorities, confirmed during the oral session

4. Training Plan

4.1 Target Level and Hours

Details

Current Overall Level	B1 (2)
Target Level	B1 (2) — consolidation and operational fluency
Total Training Hours	10 hours (guided coaching sessions)

Recommended Start Date

September 2026

Session Format

Video call (visio)

> Evaluator's note: Given the 10-hour scope confirmed for this training block, the objective is not to advance Déborah to B2, but to consolidate and operationalise her existing B1 level — transforming her passive grammatical knowledge into confident, accurate professional production. A follow-on programme may be recommended at review to progress toward B2 (3).

4.2 Recommended Hours Breakdown

Component	Estimated Hours	Notes
Coached sessions (visio)	10 hours	Core instructional and practice time
Structured homework tasks	~10 hours	Déborah has confirmed she is happy to complete homework; estimated at approximately 1 hour per week in support of each session
Self-study (films, TV, passive exposure)	Ongoing	To be guided and channelled — e.g., targeted vocabulary from viewing; recommended series/genre aligned to professional vocabulary
Total estimated learning time	~20 hours

4.3 Priority Content Areas

The following content areas are sequenced to move from foundational accuracy to applied professional performance across the 10-session arc:

Sessions 1-3 — Grammar Consolidation and Core Vocabulary

- Irregular past simple: high-frequency verbs in professional contexts (write/wrote, know/knew, speak/spoke, send/sent)
- Plural agreement: countable/uncountable nouns relevant to the role (calls, appointments, professors, students, information, advice)
- Present perfect introduction: I have worked here for... / I have already sent... / Have you spoken to...?
- Prepositions of place and direction: at / in / to — with professional examples (at the reception, in the office, to the second floor)

- Vocabulary: core reception and hospitality collocations (handle a call, redirect a visitor, schedule an appointment, deal with an enquiry)

Sessions 4-6 — Professional Email Writing

- Email structure and conventions: subject lines, openings, closings, formal vs. semi-formal register
- Common reception email types: welcoming a visitor, redirecting an enquiry, explaining a rule or procedure, following up
- Future and conditional structures in writing: I will / I am going to / I would like to / If you could...
- Template development: building a personal bank of reusable phrases for Déborah's most frequently written email types
- Error correction and self-editing practice

Sessions 7-9 — Spoken Professional Interaction

- Telephone English: opening and closing calls, asking for clarification, taking a message, transferring a call
- In-person reception scenarios: greeting, directing, problem-solving, explaining rules to students
- Communicative repair strategies: replacing "that's it" with paraphrase and bridging language ("What I mean is...", "Let me explain...", "I'm not sure of the exact word, but...")
- Role-play practice: progressive simulations of real HEC reception interactions
- Confidence-building techniques: turn-taking, managing silence, buying time professionally ("Just one moment," "Let me check that for you")

Session 10 — Review and Assessment

- Simulated role-play: telephone call + in-person visitor scenario (assessed against Objective 3)
- Email writing task (assessed against Objective 2)
- Grammar consolidation check (assessed against Objective 1)
- Learner self-assessment and reflection
- Review of progress; recommendation for next steps / follow-on programme

| 4.4 Homework and Self-Study Guidance

Déborah has confirmed she is happy to receive homework tasks. The following self-study approach is recommended:

- Weekly homework tasks (approximately 1 hour) linked directly to the session content — e.g., gap-fill exercises on irregular verbs, email drafts for correction, vocabulary matching activities

- Vocabulary notebook: a dedicated list of professional collocations and phrases from her workplace, added to each week and reviewed at the start of each session
- Film and TV viewing (Déborah's existing habit): channelled toward professional or workplace-themed content where possible; encouraged to note 3-5 new expressions per week
- Email drafting practice: between email-focused sessions, Déborah will be encouraged to draft short emails based on real situations that arise at work and bring them to the next session for review

| 4.5 Confirmed Scheduling

Details

Primary availability	Wednesday afternoons
Additional availability	Tuesday afternoons; Friday afternoons
Session format	Video call (visio)
Preferred start	September 2026
Session duration	60 minutes per session (recommended)
Frequency	Weekly or fortnightly depending on scheduling

| 4.6 Pedagogical Approach

Déborah has indicated that she dislikes academic approaches and prefers hands-on, practical learning. She was candid about finding school-based learning difficult. This learner profile calls for the following instructional principles throughout the programme:

- Task-based and role-play-led: every session should be anchored in a real professional scenario relevant to her daily work at HEC
- Minimal metalanguage: grammar points should be introduced through examples and use, not abstract rules — brief, clear correction rather than lengthy grammatical explanation
- Confidence-first design: early sessions should be designed to generate quick wins and visible progress, lowering affective barriers to speaking
- Template and model-based writing: rather than asking Déborah to write from scratch, provide sentence-level and then full-email models that she adapts — scaffolded toward independence
- Recycling and repetition: core vocabulary and structures revisited across multiple sessions in varied contexts to build automaticity
- Positive reinforcement of self-correction: Déborah already self-corrects spontaneously — this should be explicitly praised and cultivated as a learning strategy

5. Evaluator Narrative Summary

Déborah Vichith presents as a motivated and self-aware English language learner whose profile is defined by a productive tension: she understands more than she can currently produce, and she knows more than she can yet confidently use. This is, in fact, an encouraging starting point.
